Fund Description

The Fund aims to achieve capital appreciation by investing primarily in equity securities of companies of any nation that the investment manager believes are available at market prices less than their intrinsic value. The Fund primarily invests in mid and large-cap companies with a market capitalisation around or greater than 1.5 billion US dollars. To a lesser extent, the Fund may also invest in distressed securities and merger arbitrage situations.

Performance Review

ONE-MONTH KEY PERFORMANCE DRIVERS

HURT	China Pacific Insurance (Group) Co., Ltd. Class H	—	China
	Cognizant Technology Solutions Corporation Class A	—	—

- Shares of Charter Communication continued to rally off the March market bottom, rising steadily in May after the company reported financial results characterized by a net subscriber increase and reduced customer service costs. Management reported subscriber additions that were well ahead of consensus expectations. Also, the percentage of self-installed cable connections increased to 90% from 55% as coronavirus social distancing measure restricted installation by a company employee. The cost of a self-installation is one-third that of a professional, and the potential savings to the company is significant.
- Disney's shares rebounded from low levels in late March as investors responded positively to the gradual reopening of the company's theme park related assets. During the period, management initiated a phased reopening of a shopping center/restaurant complex at Disney World in Florida as part of a broader plan to reopen that park. Earlier, Shanghai Disneyland reopened at less-than-full capacity following a three-month shutdown. Fiscal second-quarter earnings declined significantly, and management suspended the July semiannual dividend (about $1.6 billion) to preserve cash. Disney+, the company's proprietary streaming service that launched in 2019, continued to perform well, adding a significant number of subscribers in India in its first month of operation.

- Investors shed Cognizant's stock after the professional services company reported a decline in first-quarter profit as disruptions stemming from the coronavirus lockdown cut into revenue. A ransomware attack on the company's internal systems late in the period also contributed to the disappointing results. Despite the setback, management reported an improved deal-win rate – up 30% year-over-year, the best since 2017 – indicating that initiatives implemented since CEO Brian Humphries appointment in 2019 are leading to improvements.

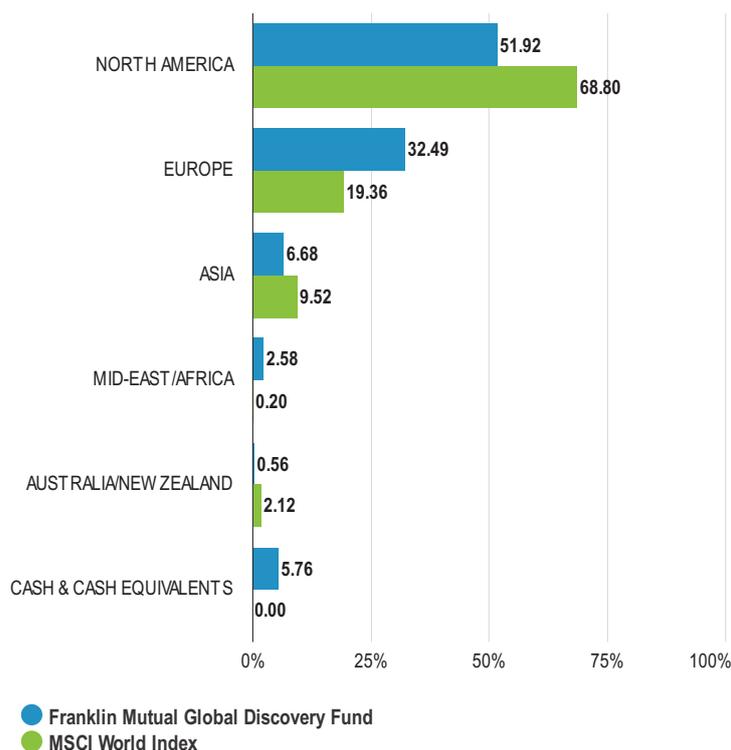

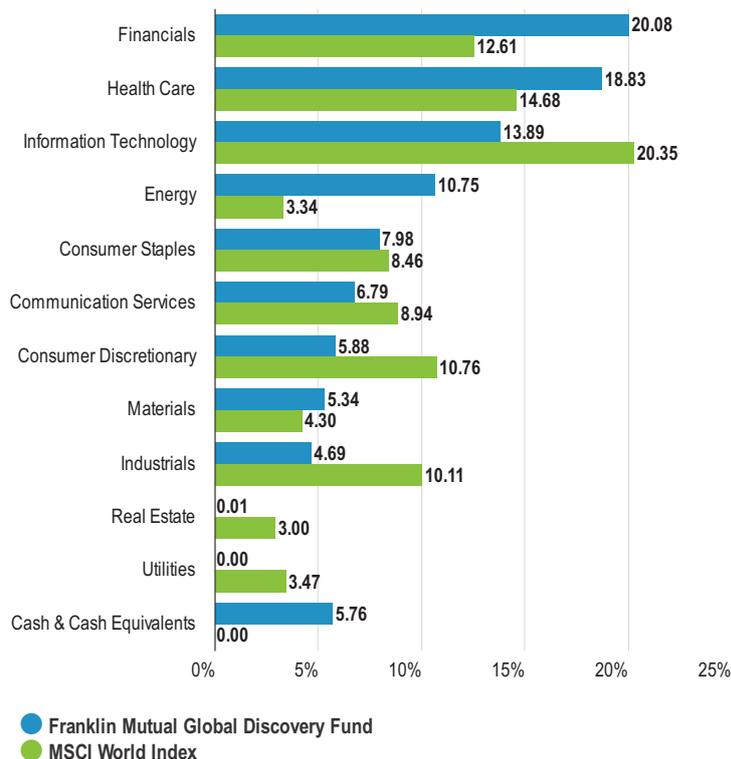

Outlook & Strategy

- The global economy is in the throes of a sharp economic downturn. According to the International Monetary Fund, global gross domestic product (GDP) is expected to decline by 3% in 2020. By comparison, global GDP declined 0.6% during the Global Financial Crisis in 2009. In response, policymakers have unveiled substantial fiscal and monetary stimulus packages, with the United States being the most aggressive. Late in the period, the European Union announced a proposed $750 billion-euro stimulus plan that, in part, proposes financial burden sharing among member states.
- Amid the economic uncertainty, several countries took steps to ease lockdown restrictions and encourage economic activity. Italy and Greece opened some tourist sites with social distancing measures in place to reduce crowds. There was also nascent evidence that the economic crisis may have reached an inflection point. In the United States, new unemployment insurance claims declined for the eighth consecutive week, and continuing claims – workers who first filed for unemployment in earlier weeks and remain out of work—fell unexpectedly, according to a US Labor Department report. Consumer confidence also ticked up slightly, according to two separate sentiment measures.
- The end of May marked the close of the first-quarter financial reporting season. For many companies, the earnings effect of the shutdown was limited to the last few weeks of the period. Most management teams withdrew subsequent quarter and full-year 2020 guidance, due to limited revenue visibility. Second period financial results will provide a more complete view into the pandemic's impact on corporate income statements, but investors are rightly focused more on the outlook as economies reopen.
- During the month, all sectors posted positive gains, led by technology. Materials and industrials continued their rebound, while energy cooled following a torrid April. Growth continued to outperform value, but signals of a possible rotation emerged late in the month. Bank stocks have begun to recover, as have retailers and other businesses directly impacted by shutdowns. Recent price appreciation suggests that investors are beginning to price in a recovery, however, there remains a significant gap between current and fully recovered valuations.
- The economic implications of the global pandemic are complex and uncertain. Many health officials are forecasting a second wave in the fall, due to insufficient testing and contact tracing capacity and a premature reopening of the economy. Re-emerging geopolitical tension between the United States and China, and US civil unrest over policing of minority communities, are potential headwinds. We remain cautious amid these elevated risks and are focused on identifying opportunities that often emerge during turbulent periods. While volatility is, at times, unnerving, it's important to remember that it is inherent to investing in risk assets, and the market historically rewards investors who take a long-term perspective.

7. Beta, Information Ratio and Tracking Error information are measured against the MSCI World Index.

8. Information Ratio is a way to evaluate a manager's ability to outperform a benchmark in relation to the risk that manager is assuming, with risk defined as deviation from the benchmark. This measure is calculated by dividing the portfolio's excess return (portfolio return less the benchmark return) by the tracking error (derived by taking the standard deviation of the monthly differences between the portfolio return and the benchmark return over time).
